Dr. Einstein
Sees No Major
Russ Change

By DICK FERGUSON

Dr. Norbert Einstein, speaking before the World Affairs Council Thursday evening, said the two men who have replaced Nikita Khrushchev also hold the political philosophy of "peaceful coexistence."

"So you can't say the Stalinists have returned," Dr. Einstein said. "And you can't say the new Russian leaders represent a more friendly attitude toward Red China."

Displaying the quick wit for which he is noted, Dr. Einstein described peaceful coexistence as the attitude of the farmer toward the turkey before Thanksgiving.

Military Clashes

He said, contrary to popular opinion, that the split between Red China and Russia is not just one of ideologies. He said the two Communist powers have had military clashes over territory the size of Texas in the past two or three years.

"Their problems are over territory—not over who has inherited the right kind of Marxism," Dr. Einstein said.

Switching to a national topic, Dr. Einstein said a committee to study the powers of the President of the United States should be formed. He said the present powers of the chief executive "are very unclear."

"The public has been led to believe the President is responsible for setting and conducting foreign policy," Dr. Einstein said.

Heard in 104 Countries

The Seattle foreign affairs expert, whose weekly radio program on a Seattle station is carried to 104 countries in the Free World, said the Constitution does not even make reference to the President until late in the document.

"And then it makes no reference whatsoever to the President of the United States as to conducting foreign affairs," he said.

"One thing is clear," Dr. Einstein said. "The 'power complex' of the White House is growing by leaps and bounds."

No More Influence

The speaker, who is a cousin to the late Dr. Albert Einstein, said that generally the President has no more influence in conducting foreign affairs than the Department of State, the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee or the Central Intelligence Agency.

On the South Viet Nam situation, the guest lecturer said, "I think we should have a policy—no matter how wrong it is. In any case we should discontinue the present confusion."

Dr. Einstein said one question we should consider in the Far East is this: "Just how dangerous is it to move north and engage Red China in military combat?"

World Affairs Council president Dr. Donald R. Farmer announced the next speaker will be Dr. Charles Manning of the University of London on Nov. 5. The group meets monthly at the First Congregational Church.
